The Beaches Withstand Big Deluge

NO SERIOUS DAMAGE DONE TO OCEAN BEACH BY SIX-DAY STORM

The torrential rains and intermittent high winds that struck Southern California from the southeast for six continuous days, beginning last week end and causing considerable property damage throughout San Diego, left their imprint on the beach districts in the way of washouts from flood waters, but luckily no lives were lost and there was little material destruction. In fact, according to all reports, the beach sections suffered less from the storm than any of the suburbs of the city. Street car traffic was halted at intervals during the six-day deluge and highway travel was at a disadvantage on the coast route, yet the beaches weathered the worst storm in over a decade without serious mishap. Discomforting conditions were soon overcome, while the clouds eventually rolled away and the sun is again shining happily in the heavens.

WATER SERVICE SAFE

Washing out of a big pipe line from Lake Hodges during the storm last Tuesday caused a slight crippling of the water service to Ocean Beach, Mission Beach, and La Jolla, but two other pipe lines withstod the flood water and feeder service was quite fully maintained.

SIDELIGHTS OF THE STORM

With every little let up in the rain during the week's downpour, numbers of barefooted boys and girls splashed along in the torrents of water that rushed down the main thoroughfares leading to the ocean.

At some stages of the six-day storm, Bacon street became a regular canal for several blocks and the car tracks were covered with sand and silt washed down from the hillside. Gangs of workmen were kept busy clearing the railway line for the maintenance of service.

JUDGE CHAMBERS MAKING CLEAN CAMPAIGN FOR MAYORALTY

Responding to a popular demand in which many residents of this part of the city have joined, Judge Claude L. Chambers has announced his candidacy for mayor. The platform on which he is making the race is outlined in his advertisement in another part of "The Beach News". Those who know him best admire him for his fearlessness in the discharge of the duties of the trying position of judge of the city court and his fair and impartial consideration of all cases brought before him.

Since announcing his candidacy, Judge Chambers has received numerous requests for addresses before various improvement clubs and other organizations throughout the city and cheerfully accepts all such invitations. He will speak in this locality during the campaign and is assured of large and interested audiences.

The campaign Judge Chambers is waging is an energetic but clean one and will not permit the interjection of personalities. He is urging all citizens to vote at the coming Primary, March 22, whether they vote for him or for any of his opponents. "It is a civic duty that all of us owe," he declares.

The support Judge Chambers is receiving comes from men and women in all walks of life, his record in public office having won for him a real regard of the people. He honestly believes that he can give San Diego a better government at a less outlay in taxes and if elected, will devote all of his energies to that end.

Thirteen Luckiest Girls Make Bow To Fame

Once again the world is having a coming out party that is greater than the presentation of a queen. It is the presentation to the world of the thirteen queens of the motion picture world for 1927. The girls are the Wampas Baby Stars for 1927. Each year the members of the Wampas, an organization of the motion picture exploitation men select thirteen of the young women of the film colony, who, they believe have the greatest opportunity to become stars within the year. The selection is almost priceless to the girls. It is as nearly as anything can be, a guarantee of screen fame. Out of the thirteen girls of a year ago, five have since been starred, and each of the others has done well. This year the thirteen baby stars were recently presented at a huge ball given in the Angel City.

DELIGHTFUL EVIDENCE THAT THIS PAPER IS WELCOMED WEEKLY

"The popularity of the Beach News' is not limited to San Diego county," writes Rev. William I. Newman, pastor of the Congregational church, Ocean Beach, who regularly mails a copy of "The Beach News" to his father, Dr. W. H. Newman, a well known practicing physician of Long Beach, Calif. One week recently Pastor Newman failed to mail the customary paper and he says his father wrote him at once "complaining that he had greatly missed his copy of 'The Beach News' for that week."

EXTRA BUS SERVICE ON VOLTAIRE STREET

Favorable action was taken by the railroad commission this week on a petition for an increase in service of the bus line on Voltaire street, connecting with the electric railway. Additional motor bus service will be put into effect soon by the street railway company.

"The Pauper's Funeral"

WRITTEN FOR "THE BEACH NEWS"

By DAVID C. CROSBY, Ocean Beach, California

There was a wonderful exhibition of that spiritual vibration that the Welch people call the "Whaall" which filled the hall. We had never felt the like of it before, nor since that day.

Colonel Morgan sat still until the wave had passed, and the audience had recovered from its surprise, and then he arose and stood still about a minute, looking at the people, as though trying to get steady, and then in a voice husky with emotion he said;

"Seventy-five years ago in Aberdeen, in the grand old country called Scotland, there was born on a farm, a sturdy babe, of sturdy parents, who fourteen years later left their dear old heather hills, and came to America. They belonged to the old Highland "Clan —MacClure," and they named their boy "Duncan." He was the only child, and he proved to be an unusual boy, very ambitious. He tried to learn about all things that came his way, and among other things he became an expert swimmer, because, he said it could not do any harm, and it might come in handy some wet day. He was a son that not only his parents but any land that he might adopt as his home, might well be proud of.

When he was twenty years old, a splendid specimen of manhood, he was working on a farm on the banks of a river, near a railway bridge, and up the river there had been a heavy rain, and by the time the water reachel the bridge, it had become a raging torrent.

Duncan among others, was striving to save the bridge, and thought they were doing it, when a train came, before it could be warned, and rushed upon the bridge. This added weight, and the vibration it made was too much, and the train and bridge went down together in the flood.

I was on that train. The sights and sounds of that day, were hard to bear, and will never be forgotten by anyone who was present. It paralyzed some of the men so they could not help in the rescue, but not so Duncan. He seemed superhuman with his mighty strength, and his knowledge of the water, as he dove into that raging torrent, and brought out one after another, myself among the number, until those who owed their lives to him, numbered eighteen.

As he dove in for another, the flood hurled a piece of timber at him, jamming him against a pier, and thus ending his efforts. By this time I was sufficiently recovered to be of some use, and with others we rescued the apparently dead hero.

We sent the broken body to the nearest hospital, where, after a hard fight, the surgeons, aided by Duncan's strong vitality, saved his life. Then Col. Morgan asked

Mr. Kennedy lives with his family on Orchard street and was formerly secretary of one of the erstwhile O. B. chambers of commerce. His injuries in the recent accident were painful but not serious.

STRAND THEATRE

Saturday, Feb. 19th, Viola Dana and George O'Hara in "Bigger Than Barnum's". A picture of circus days. The sweetest hours of childhood. The shout of the side show barker; side show freaks. The big tent, clowns, acrobats, animals, watering the elephants, the menagerie, the parade. The very smell of the circus tingles in your nostrils. This is one picture that will please the whole family and above all don't let the children miss it. There will also be a comedy, scenic and news weekly.

Sunday and Monday, Evelyn Brent and Lawrence Gray in "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em." All about one fascinating little miss who expects a great deal from this old world of ours, and gets it! And of her lovable mothering elder sister who gets it as a rule, in the neck! North Shore Community Alliance

NAME SELECTED FOR ORGANIZATION COMBINING FOUR BEACH DISTRICTS

The North Shore Community Alliance is the name given to the organization consisting of representatives from the chambers of commerce of La Jolla, Mission Beach, Pacific Beach, and Ocean Beach which was formed last Monday evening at the meeting of the Mission Beach chamber of commerce at the Mission Beach casino.

Judge Claude Chambers and Mrs. William S. Hunt, present president and secretary of the Mission Beach chamber of commerce were made temporary president and secretary of the new organization. A committee was appointed consisting of Judge Keene of La Jolla, A. L. Mitchell of Pacific Beach, Franklin A. Plank of Ocean Beach and Charles Liftchild of Mission Beach to make arrangements for the get-to-gether dinner dance to be given at the Mission Beach Casino in the near future.

S. B. Koch of Santa Monica gave a most inspiring talk regarding the future of San Diego's beaches, basing his statements from his years of experience in the development of Santa Monica and vicinity.

Charles Liftchild was appointed to draw up suitable by-laws for the new organization. The Alliance will have a dinner and meeting on Monday evening, February 21.

OPPORTUNITY AWAITS MODERN ENTERPRISES IN NEW KRAFT BUILDING

With the interior finishings in the new Kraft building now completed, an excellent opportunity is afforded for tenancy of the three new stores on Bacon street, as well as for the rental of very desirable offices and splendid upstairs apartments, both furnished and unfurnished.

There is an early possibility of a modern furniture store being opened in one of the new stores, while another will very likely be occupied by a combination shoe and clothing emporium, with a prominent chain food store as a third neighbor.

Although nothing definite has been arranged as yet, it is wisely conceded by those with true mercantile foresight that the time and place are equally opportune for the entrance of varied enterprising business concerns in Ocean Beach, thus assuring a decided increase in commerce along with the great growth in population and improvements.

Both Admitted to Supreme Court

Representative and Mrs. John J. Kindred of New York, who are both lawyers, were admitted to practice before the United States Supreme court, an event that is unusual in the annals of this high judicial body. Before studying law, Mr. Kindred was a noted alienist and served on the medical staffs of large hospitals in New York state. Mrs. Kindred took her A. B. from Vassar.

Advancing Years No Handicap to Genius

Doctor Johnson undertook to learn the Dutch language but a few years before his death. His daily amusement about this time consisted in committing to memory about eight hundred lines of Virgil. At the age of seventy-three, when suffering from a severe attack of paralysis which rendered him all but speechless, he composed a Latin prayer, in order to test his power of memory.

The marquis de Saint Aulaire began to write poetry at the age of seventy-three, and the Muses crowned him with many laurels.

Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales" were the composition of his latest years. They were begun in his fifty-fourth year and finished in his sixty-first.

Benvenuto Cellini did not begin his most delightful autobiography until "the clock of his age had struck fifty-eight."—Market for Exchange.

The new outdoor substation of the Edison company at Redlands will soon be finished at a cost of approximately $70,000. Most of the switches and lines are placed out of doors, and there is but one building in the big yards, that for the operator.

Attorney General U. S. Webb rendered an opinion to District Attorney Wm. J. Brown of Stanislaus county holding that while it is within the authority of school boards to declare school holidays, the boards, under the law, cannot order half holidays.

Building activity at Willows, is exceeding any record of the past ten years. There are fourteen houses which are under construction, just completed or contemplated. For the last six months houses, apartments and rooms have been hard to obtain.

Creating the 800 acres comprising Black Mountain, a 3,000-foot peak which pierces the sky of Watts valley, into a public park and game preserve for the "benefit of the people of his home county," the will of W. S. Cranmer, pioneer educator of the San Joaquin valley, who died in Fresno on January 3, has been offered for probate in the superior court.

A chapel building, devoted to the devotional services and musical features of the University of Redlands, classic in its exterior and dignified in interior treatment, is being built at the University of Redlands. The chapel will be 100x168 feet. The main part will seat 1,500, and there will be a choir loft that will seat 200. The building costing $180,000, an organ costing $36,000 and the furnishings will bring the total expenditures to $240,000.

Petaluma produced about 10 per cent of the country's egg output in 1926, according to the report of President S. S. Knigat to the Petaluma Poultry Keepers' Association. "The world's egg basket," by producing about 34,000,000 dozens of eggs, made up 40 per cent of California's output of approximately 85,000,000 dozens. According to the president's report, Petaluma ranchers received on an average 5 cents less per dozen for their eggs in 1926 than in 1925.

The cost of the improvements will be about $180,000 financed by bonds voted by the electors.

The Days of '49, celebrated by Sacramento in May 1922, will be revived in 1929 if the members of the board of directors of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce vote favorably on a request now before them. The possibility of holding a Days of '49 celebration in Sacramento has been submitted to the directorate by Arthur S. Dudley, secretary-manager of the chamber, and some definite decision is expected at their next meeting. The matter came up recently, but was laid over for further consideration.

It is announced that the Southern California Edison company plans to spend $223,000 in 1927 for electrical extensions and reinforcements in the Lancaster district, which includes Palmdale, Mojave and Little Rock. The money will be used largely for reinforcement requirements at the Del Sur substation, the enlargement of main feeder lines and extensions.

Mrs. Sarah Nash Ward, 96, who was a pioneer of Sonoma county, died at the home of her son, Judge Nelson Ward, at Compton. Mrs. Ward resided for many years at the Little place on Spring Hill, near Sebastopol.

The thriving business activities of Glendora during the year 1926 have been due largely to the picturesque location and the unusual natural advantages of the city, which have drawn men of great wealth to the community. Approximately $765,500 was paid in cash during the year for 188 acres of choice foothill citrus groves located within one and a half miles of the business center of the town. Half of this acreage brought $5000 per acre. Much of the property was purchased by eastern business men who recognized the investment possibilities in a California orange grove as well as an ideal site for a winter home. There was also unusual activity in the sale of town lots and butlying real estate.

Nearly $5,000,000 in tax money will be due the state government, it was indicated in records of the state controller recently, if the electric railway tax decision rendered by Superior Judge Peter J. Shields of Sacramento county last week is not reversed in expected appeals to the Supreme Court. In a case involving electric lines of the Southern Pacific Railroad Judge Shields held that all railroad lines, steam or electric, should be taxed uniformly at 7 per cent of gross receipts. Applying this ruling to all California electric lines which have been paying at 5¼ per cent, records show that state would receive $4,926,000 in back taxes accruing since 1921 when the King bill tax increase became effective.

Declaring that his department is better equipped financially for fire prevention and suppression work than ever before in the state's history, State Forester M. B. Pratt began arrangements for a greatly strengthened state forest ranger organization and for co-operative fire fighting agreements with the various county governments looking toward the 1927 season of hazard in the timber regions. Under Governor Young's budget program, Pratt said, the state will have $106,450 a year for fire fighting and prevention, including approximately $29,970 from the Federal government and $10,000 to be collected from private timber owners under the compulsory patrol law.

It may be common knowledge in some quarters throughout California that hip flask salesmen frequently deal in "pint" containers decidedly undersize, but it remained for the state government to recognize that fact officially. Charles F. Hayden, chief of the state division of weights and measures, announced that during the last year his deputies confiscated several thousand undersized bottles shaped exactly like those used to contain strong drink in the pre-Volstead days. Lying scales, cheating measures and undersized "pint" bottles confiscated during 1926 had a value estimated by Hayden at over $35,000.

The University of California may acquire 35 acres of the 100-acre site of the California School of the Deaf in Berkeley, if plans now under way are successful. As a possible site for dormitories or experimental gardens, the northern 35 acres of the site, may be purchased by the university as the result of the introduction of a bill authorizing the sale of the land in the legislature by Assemblyman Harrison C. Kelsey of Berkeley. The school is to be moved to a new site in Alameda county, and, under the bill, the land will then be put up for sale.

More than 7,000 gallons of wine were dumped recently at the Carl & Arata Winery at Fulton by Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue William Shackelton. The vintage was destroyed at the request of the winery owners who had grown weary of paying taxes and not being able to find a market. In the big wineries of Sonoma county there are still several million gallons of wine, much of it made years ago. This is being kept for shipment on government permit for sacramental and medicinal purposes.

Perhaps unearthing a mystery ten years old, workmen excavating on a road right of way near Lexington, in the Santa Cruz mountains, dug up a human skeleton about two feet under the surface of the ground. There was no vestige of cloth or metal to suggest that the body had been clothed when buried. Deputy Coroner Williams declared that the bones probably had been there a decade, and that they probably were those of an adult.

The Nevada Press Association, through Harold P. Hale, president, has invited the California Press Association to hold its convention in Reno next July. The invitation was forwarded to ex-Governor Friend W. Richardson, president of the California organization. President Hale plans a joint session of the two bodies, with the convention to last a week during the highway exposition.

The private water system, owned by Walls, Laird & Spicer, Alturas, which has served the southern portion of the town, has been acquired by the municipality and added to the city water system. All of the water is now municipally supplied to Alturas residents.

The directors of the farm bureau dairy department are considering the adoption of the testing rules as outlined by the California Cow Testing association. Under the new rules all cows in the herd, whether in milk, or dry, will be used in figuring monthly averages.

More than 130 persons from all parts of the Imperial valley were in attendance at the monthly meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, held in Brawley recently, breaking all records for attendance since the organization of the valley-wide chamber.

Louis XIV

"I AM the state."

The man who said this threw a tremendous accent on the "I." It was a way he had. He went on the theory that he and his personal longings, ambitions and glories were the only things on earth to be considered.

Yet this conceited little man in the big wig was the greatest sovereign of his day. For he was the "Grand Monarch," Louis XIV, king of France.

Richelieu, the cardinal and prime minister, who had done so much for France, and incidentally for himself, was dead. And Louis XIII had died soon after his minister, leaving the throne to his five-year-old son, Louis XIV. Cardinal Mazarin had succeeded Richelieu as prime minister, and managed to embroil France in foreign wars and domestic revolts. He was a miser and forced the Boy king to sleep in dirty, tattered sheets and to practice other humiliating petty economies. Fouquet, the minister of finance, took advantage of the unsettled state of the court to rob the royal exchequer. Other abuses flourished unhindered.

Hence, when Mazarin died, in 1661, the twenty-three-year-old Louis decided he had had enough of ministers. When asked to whom various matters of state were henceforth to be referred, he replied: "To me!" Henceforth he reigned as an absolute dictator. France was wrecked by war, discontent and hard times. The treasury was in bad condition. The young monarch found his position no sinecure.

He set to work at once to build up the country, without and within.

At once the Golden age or France began to dawn. By 1678, Louis was everywhere acknowledged to be the most powerful sovereign of Europe. His army was the largest on earth. Industry, literature, architecture and art flourished in his realms as never before. The French court's magnificence was the envy of all nations. Among the famous men who added lustre to Louis' reign and left immortal names to posterity were the poet-dramatists Moliere, Racine and Corneille; the painters, Claude Lorraine and Lebrun; the architect, Mansard, and the preacher, Bossuet. France's armies won everywhere brilliant victories and France's fame and that of its king were world-wide.

Louis' personal character was oddly out of keeping with all this greatness. A man of notoriously bad morals, he was also intolerably vain, arrogant and self-centered. The man who plans only for his own glory can win no permanent success. And so it proved with the grand monarch. He outlived his greatness. As the years went on the men of genius who had contributed so largely to his success began to die off. None of equal mentality replaced them. The beautiful and wicked women who in turn had swayed the court were now only old and wicked. The grand monarch himself was feeling and showing the marks of age and of the life he had led. Nor were his country's affairs in less decadent condition. By an unjust and idiotic act of his own Louis hastened the downfall of the supremacy he had achieved.

Mme. de Maintenon, a woman of intensely religious tendencies but of narrow, limited intellect, attracted the old king's fancy. He secretly married her. Thereafter her influence over him was boundless. At her wish the gay court grew sombre and stupid. The king devoted to piety the hours that had formerly been given to pleasrure. Then, at his wife's urgent plea, he revoked the edict of Nantes. This edict, established by Henry IV, granted religious freedom and many other privileges to the Huguenots (Protestants) throughout France. Its revocation threw the country into panic. By thousands the Huguenots emigrated to Holland, England and America. France suffered incalculable injury from the wholesale departure of these ill-treated people.

Holland, Germany and Spain formed an alliance against France, and Louis learned most keenly that his power was on the wane. Then came the crushing blow of his whole life, in the famous war of the Spanish succession. The king of Spain, dying, bequeathed his throne to the duke of Anjou, Louis' grandson. This, a crowning result of Louis' diplomacy, threatened to unite the kingdoms of France and Spain. But the Archduke Charles disputed Anjou's claim; and Germany, Holland and England, espousing the archduke's cause, combined against Louis. In battle after battle the allies defeated the grand monarch's armies, until, by 1713, France was beaten and humiliated and glad to sue for peace. Here Louis' old-time genius flared up for the moment; for only his statecraft and policy saved his country from dismemberment at this critical moment.

On September 1, 1719, in his seventy-seventh year, Louis XIV died. His greatness had died long before him. He lived to see his country humbled and disgraced through his follies, to see the plain people overburdened and oppressed by taxes to pay for his extravagances; to witness the death of his son and grandson, and to know that the era of panic and semi-anarchy which was at hand was due to his own mistakes and sins. Surely a tolerably severe lesson in the folly of living wholly for one's self and for personal glory.

At England's Tip

Land's End, Southernmost Tip of England.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE coast of England's southwestern peninsula that tapers out to Land's End is an unfriendly coast with its heavy sea and winds and thick fogs, and a dangerous one. Its rocks are ever ready to tear holes in the stoutest vessel; its currents are ever ready to drive them on. But it is a picturesque coast; a wonderfully beautiful coast, both upon summer days and in winter storms; a coast with many harbors, none too easy of entrance by reason of rocks and tides, many impossible for any but the smallest craft, but all made as serviceable as natural difficulties permit.

There is Penzance, the sunny pleasure-loving little sea city, whence came those picturesque stage pirates that made tuneful our youth. The coast is no more beautiful here on Mounts Bay than elsewhere to east or west; not so rugged or so wild as on Cornwall's northern shore, but the curve of green cliff is very smooth and lovely, the sun shines warmly; the roses bloom; every baby ripple murmurs a sea story; every tiny breeze brings a legend. It is a fascinating place not only for what it is, but what it suggests.

There is Little Mousehole, on her right, beyond Newlyn—lovely Newlyn, beloved of fishermen and artists. Mousehole ("Mousel," in local speech) was an important port before London was a town.

As for Marazion, to her left, who shall measure her years? According to Cornish history, "in the days of Ezekiel the prophet" it was already an important city, to which Phoenician merchants came for tin. For a town which has entertained Phoenicians and giants and has looked for centuries at a castled island floating in a marvelous sea, Marazion is remarkable dull. No one goes there except to visit the island which gives the bay its name.

St. Michael's Mount.

St. Michael's Mount, little brother to Mont St. Michel off the Breton coast, is a rocky islet 230 feet high and a half mile from shore, with which it is connected by a natural causeway uncovered for about three hours at ordinary low tides. With southwest gales the island may remain an island for weeks, and with high seas be inaccessible even to boats. It is a most picturesque pile; its steep grassy slopes, in springtime yellow with a million daffodils, crowned with the irregular jumble of chapel and castle and ringed by a gleaming sea.

It has much history. Like the other St. Michael, it stood once in a forest and was pagan, Christian, druidical; it has been tenanted by saint and sinner, soldier, monk, and knight. Dearest to the heart, perhaps, is the story of Cormoran, whom later Jack-the-Giant-Killer slew, dearest perhaps because of the memories of little girls and boys who loved the story long ago.

We may follow the coast-line eastward and southward to the Lizard, passing the great wireless station upon Poldhu, or cut across the little neck of land to Falmouth, a very fair harbor. Megavissey, beyond, is but a fishing port, where pilchards sometimes become sardines; but Fowey, to which we next come, has considerable past importance and present pride.

Once it was one of the great seaports of the kingdom. Boats from Fowey sailed by scores to the Crusades, to the siege of Calais, to the plundering of Normandy. "Fowey gallants" swaggered on all the then known seas, and when not busy with strangers turned to trimming their rivals nearer home. Finally they were accused of piracy and Edward IV confiscated their ships and gave them to Dartmouth.

Eastward from Fowey upon the coast, in a cleft so narrow, so jagged, so rocky one wonders why men chose it for a home, lies Polperro, the most picturesque, the most unspoiled of Cornish fishing ports, retaining all its ancient dignity of life and labor unfluttered by the summer villas now beginning to crowd the cliffs above its head.

Polperro a Charming Place.

Polperro is a fishing town but it did not always depend upon fish for a living. In the days when smuggling was a profession, if not an art, Polperro had few rivals, and, reading old tales, one sees quite clearly why men chose these clefts for habitations. Conveniently near are coves and caves, undiscoverable by the keenest customs officers, and boatmen could sail in and out of these narrow rock-bound harbors fearing no pursuit.

Let us look attentively at Polperro, at its closely huddled houses, built on and in and of the rock; its roses and fuchsias and clematis, which bloom as luxuriantly as in southern climes; for these rock clefts are sheltered from winter winds and warmed by the southern sun; at its little rock-bound gleaming harbor, where at high tide the boats rock lazily and at low water a thousand silvery gulls pick up their dainty feet discreetly in the ooze; at its steep, slippery cliffs, whence one has such glorious breezy views of sea and rock and headland, and of the warm sheltered valley at one's feet.

Polperro attends to its own business, and that does not include catering to tourists. There are always artists at Polperro. They and the fishermen observe each other, become friends, perhaps; but business is not mentioned between them.

Clovelly fills a rock cleft on the north Devon shore as Polperro does upon the southern Cornish one, but there all comparisons end. Clovelly may be still an earnest fishing village, but her looks belie it. "The most exquisite village in England" some one called her, and she deserves the title.

From the coach-road where, at the top of the cliffs, you enter upon Clovelly's one street, to the sea; or, if you come by boat, from the harbor to Hobby Drive, and the public road, everything is dainty, elegant of its kind, groomed to impossible perfection. No whitewash gleams whiter or bluer or more delicately yellow than here at Clovelly; no roses, fuchsias, clematis, nor lilies bloom in more profusion; no trees are richer and greener, no vines more luxuriantly graceful than there. Never a bit of paper litters that one stony street, more staircase than roadway; no speck of dust mars shining windows or spotless curtains; no noise of railroads, of trolley cars, of traffic, breaks the soft stillness of this village of delight. Down the street goes a long procession of tourists arriving by coach from Bideford or Boscastle, stopping at every house to "Oh!" and "Ah!" and perhaps to buy souvenirs or to eat strawberries and cream.

Tintagel of Arthurian Legend.

At Tintagel more than at any place, perhaps, what we bring measures what we take away. Come full of the Arthurian legend; come with Tennyson, with Hawker, with Mallory, and, in spite of "modern criticism," you will savor nought but romance.

Here are the ruins of Tintagel about you; across the chasm the yet more formless remains of Terrabil, the twin fortresses known to the earliest Cornish earls. Roman, Saxon, Norman has built here; but it is not for architecture or archeology that one comes here; it is for romance.

Tintagel is not a port. Occasionally a boat comes in under the cliff with supplies for the village, but houses are few and there is little fishing. Port Isaac, farther down the coast, is a typical Cornish port. A steep carriage road descends to Port Isaac; and the little stone houses of the village cling to the sides of the ravine as best they can.

As a harbor we should not approve of it, yet it has served a fishing fleet for 400 years. Pleasant enough it is of a summer day, but in spring or autumn storm, when the waves come hurling in with appalling weight and force to suck out again, as if they would drag the village into the depths, when the fleet jockeys for hours in the trough of a vicious sea, unable to make the opening between the black cliffs, yet in constant peril of the surf, one can but wonder why men made a home there.

St. Ives sits by a smooth circle of sea into which a tongue of rocky land thrusts a bold curving headland, inclosing an inner harbor in the great sweep of the bay. Here by the sea dwells the "real" St. Ives, close-pressed, low-crouched, stone-built to withstand the worst storms of sea and time.

At St. Ives we touch "modern conveniences" once more and can take a train—very reluctantly, no doubt—back to London.

ALDERMEN DESIRED FOR DIFFERENT DISTRICTS TO OBTAIN RESULTS

Ocean Beach, Calif.,
Feb. 16, 1927.

Editor "The Beach News":

Sir: There seems to be a strong desire to have the ward system for San Diego. One thing is certain, some of the outside districts are not getting the attention they need, and should have an alderman to look after their wants. La Jolla and Pacific Beach should have one, Point Loma and Ocean Beach with Mission Beach should have one, Mission Hills one, East San Diego one, and Logan Heights one, and so on.

There are plenty of good men in these places to fill the bill, and who would give much more time to the business for the salary paid. Present conditions are not satisfactory, and a change could be no worse. This is a good time to make it. If Mr. Hastings will add to his comprehensive platform a pledge to work for this change, I believe he can be elected. We voters should demand this pledge from every one that asks our vote for a public office. Rev. Roy Campbell has done good work in calling candidates to his pulpit for a declaration of their intentions. This puts them on record. Voters awake!

ATTRACTIVE TYPING BUDGETS BY STUDENTS

Miss Hill's advanced typing classes at Point Loma High school recently completed some very attractive budgets, containing pages of school news items, current events, jokes, short stories, model letters, and poems. Clever designs for covers and headings and the attractive arrangement of the material made them real works of art. The budgets were backed with colored art paper and tied with silk cord.

THE TAX INCREASING CRUSADE

The record of more than 13,000 new laws enacted by state legislatures in 1925 out of a total of 40,956 bills introduced, will probably be broken this year. Legislatures are meeting this year in all states except Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia.

A survey reveals an increasing number of new law-promoting groups representing active minorities and special class groups, including religious, social, civic, labor, women and other bodies. Each has its own panacea or special class advantage in mind and is endeavoring by legislative decree to restrain, reform or arbitrarily control the conduct, morals, business methods and domestic lives of others.

A heavy crop of bills designed to regulate or restrict industrial and commercial operations and for new forms of taxation, together with many anti-crime and social welfare proposals, is indicated by the survey.

LATEST GOODYEAR BALLOON TIRES ANNOUNCED BY HENRY EULBERG

The new Goodyear All-Weather balloon tire, announced shortly after January first, is the most important development in the automobile tire industry since the introduction of the cord tire, according to Henry Eulberg, proprietor of the Ocean Beach garage at 4868 Newport avenue.

"Ever since balloon tires were has been conducting extensive exintroduced, the Goodyear company perimentation for the purpose of developing a new and superior tread," says the enterprising and well known Henry. "During a two-year period 80 different treads were constructed by Goodyear and put into rad service covering hundreds of thousands of miles, and out of this practical research has come the new Goodyear All-Weather tread, scientifically designed for balloon tire use."

"A special feature of the new Goodyear balloon tire is the long, even and slow tread wear as opposed to uneven and rapid tread wear noticeable in many balloon tires in the past, and the new tire runs smoothly and quietly without producing vibration.

BALBOA THEATRE

A picture made entirely in San Diego on the U. S. S. Omaha, U. S. S. Melville, Carriso Gorge, Balboa Park, and Mission Beach comes to Balboa theatre for one week starting today.

Douglas MacLean, he of the million dollar grin, is back in uniform again! Yes sir, not since the never-to-be-forgotten "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave" has Doug donned Uncle Sam's official clothing. And this time, (leave it to MacLean for originality,) he's a marine who doesn't even go to war. Why? Because there isn't any. But, he does win a glorious victory over gloom an win a glorious victory over gloom and if that's not enough, you'll just have to "Let It Rain".

As the star of Paramount's current comedy release, "Let It Rain", MacLean appears as a happy-go-lucky marine who ambles along until he meets the girl of his heart. Then he decides to cast off his nickname, "Let It Rain", and seek promotion. How he does this, by foiling a gang of desperados who attempt to rob a runaway mail train, provides both laughs and thrills.

In conjunction with Douglas MacLean's screen feature at the Balboa theatre this week, West Coast Theatres Inc., present Fanchon and Marco's "Idea," entitled, "Happy Hour at Sea", with appropriate stage settings, and a cast of principles whose names are still headliners in stage production.

Leon Vavara, pianist artist and comedian, is featured as a new member of the Fanchon and Marco group of stars appearing over the West Coast circuit. Appearing with Vavara, is Armanda Chirot, sensational songbird of grand opera from the city of Mexico, Jose Mercado, Mexican tenor, Will Cowan, dancer, and dainty Dorren Wilde, dancer.

With Mr. Lyons famous Balboa Music Masters, the entire showing will be enhanced by his usual high standard of symphonic excellence.

CABRILLO THEATRE

Lewis Stone, coming to the Cabrillo theatre for one week, starting today, bids for the title of the screen's greatest lover in this film, portraying a smooth, suave, sophisticated genius who sets new heights to his dramatic characterizations.

Shirley Mason supporting the star, plays the role of a young girl in the first flush of infatuation for an older man. The rest of the brilliant cast keeps pep with the stars.

Since the story is of high society life, it goes without saying that the production is gorgeously costumed. Romantic Budapest and the luxurious Riviera provide such a colorful background to the play that just the setting alone of the picture gives keen enjoyment, according to the critics who have passed their approval.

An astonishing number of good looking girls have been gathered together in the cast. Few films can boast of such a picture gallery as Natalie Kingston, Betty Francisco, Madeline Hurlock, Gertrude Olmstead and Alma Bennett, as well as a score or more of entrancing extras.

Mother's Cook Book

There is a general agreement, except perhaps on the part of a few wayward ascetics, not only that health is a blessing, but that to the want of it may safely be ascribed no inconsiderable part of our present ethical and social problems.—James Harvey Robinson.

GOOD THINGS WE ENJOY

TO THE few minced pieces of left-over chicken add a little veal with a bone or two, stew and when well cooked drop in the following dumplings:

Dumplings.

Take one cupful of fresh butter milk, sift one cupful of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, add one beaten egg, some salt, mix well and drop from a teaspoon into the stew. Cook tightly covered for eight minutes, then serve at once.

Blackstone Dressing.

Mix four tablespoonfuls each of mayonnaise dressing and whipped cream, two tablespoonfuls of chili sauce, two of tomato catsup and two of vinegar. Roquefort cheese may be added if desired.

Marshmallow Salad.

Cut three slices of pineapple in dice, add a dozen quartered marshmallows, one-half cupful of chopped nuts, a cupful of seeded white grapes, the pulp of two oranges. Serve when well mixed with mayonnaise, on lettuce.

Spanish Pepper Salad.

Dissolve half a box of gelatin in half a cupful of cold water, add one-half cupful of vinegar, one-half cupful of sugar, the juice of a lemon and a tablespoonful of salt, with a cupful of boiling water. Mix six canned pimentos with two cupfuls of finely cut celery, one cupful of cut pecan meats. Serve on lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Friendship Village Muffins.

Beat two eggs, add four tablespoonfuls of sugar, two of shortening and one cupful of milk with flour to make a thin batter; add one teaspoonful of baking powder and beat well. Bake in muffin pans.

Western Salad.

Chop four hard-cooked eggs, four tablespoonfuls of onion also chopped, four tablespoonfuls of watermelon pickle and cheese chopped. Save out the yolks of two eggs and put through a ricer to garnish the top.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

THE OPENING PRELUDE

OUR fingers are on the keys of a great organ, whose voice as yet is unknown to any other ears but our own.

A strange fear takes hold of us as we are about to play the introductory prelude, for which the world has been waiting since we were children, trudging to and from school with our little packs of books.

We are our own composers, searching among the crannies of our brain for a suitable theme.

We cannot play from the scores written by others, for that is prohibited by the powers that be—the powers which set us down here on this planet, and over which we have no control.

We must use our own notes, create our own phrases, construct our own periods and weave our own harmonies.

We must exhibit in playing them our touch, our feeling, our force, the fine art of phrasing and all those subtle qualities for which the world has been so long waiting to hear and see and feel.

We press the keys. As we do so, the thought comes to us that our boyhood or girlhood has ceased.

The thought for a moment overwhelms us, but we gather strength and assurance from the swelling music and play on until the prelude dies away.

Then we step down from our stool into the noisier, sterner activities of life, where we shall make sweet harmonies or jarring discords till the end of our day.

It is the tuning point in our career, a change, perchance in the world's thoughts and our own.

We are to play our part now like masters.

We are to make music that shall be an inspiration to those other school boys and girls who have taken our places.

From this day we are to be their torch-bearers.

Our responsibilities weigh heavily upon our shoulders.

Every false note we touch they will hear. They are straining their ears and listening to us just as we listened to others in the days not yet so far away.

They are watching our every movement while we are shaping their lives, giving them vision of the future, stirring their love or hate, imparting courage or cowardice, and making them fit to take their places at the great organ and acquit themselves with greater credit than did their predecessors.

CAUTION AND COWARDS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHO are the cowards? No, not those
Who test the bridge before they cross,
Who ask the traveler who knows,
Consult the skies when billows toss,
And watch the path they have to tread
For dangers that may lie ahead.

Who are the cowards? Fools who fear
The idle words of other fools—
Who warning signals will not hear,
Nor look for signs, nor seek for rules,
For fear some other fool may call
Precaution weakness after all.

Who are the cowards? They who race
To cross the railroad, when to pause
May bring a sneer to someone's face,
A face inclined to sneer at laws
And judgment and the common sense
Of wisdom and experience.

Who are the cowards? Fools rush in,
You know, where angels fear to tread—
Yes, fearing censure, deeply sin
And leave their monuments of dead
To prove that cowards men may be
Who think themselves all bravery.

These are the cowards. But the brave
Are those who fear not folly's sneer.
They are the ones who lives will save
And live their own with conscience clear.
Oh, this we need in every trade:
Men brave enough to be afraid.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

HUSBANDS AND FIRES

IF A woman has good success in building fires she will get a good husband; if poor success she will get a lazy one.

This superstition is prevalent in Canada and some of the Western states and is found, also, in some parts of New England. It is a modern form of the age-old superstition with regard to the sacrificial fire. If the fire refused to burn up brightly upon the altar it was supposed to be a sign that the sacrifice was not acceptable to the gods, whereas a bright and lively flame was taken as an omen of divine approval. The Greeks were very sensitive about the burning of their sacrificial fires and if one seemed to be reluctant to burn they resorted to the expedient of the modern domestic and poured oil upon it, thereby forcing destiny as it were. Thus we get the idea of good luck and bad luck as told by the action of the fire.

It is certainly bad luck for a woman to have a lazy husband. But the restriction of the modern superstition to women with regard to marriage comes through the application of the idea to the torch of Hymen, the Greek god of marriage who was represented as a taller and more serious youth than Eros, the god of love, but like Eros carrying a flaming torch. In the Greek marriage processions lighted torches in imitation of the torch of Hymen were carried by the bride's mother and it was accounted a presage of bad luck to have one of them refuse to burn readily or go out.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"HULLABALOO"

THIS term, meaning a great deal of noise, a sort of bedlam of sound created usually by many voices, is a good example of the wealth of color and history that is concealed in some of our commonest words.

"Hullabaloo" comes to us from the Coranach, the funeral dirge formerly in use among the Irish and Scottish Celts. This consisted of several verses detailing the life of the deceased and proclaiming in loud and mournful accents the loss of those left behind.

The cries were called by the Irish "Hulagahue," and "hululu," and it is from the latter that we have the still popular "hullabaloo."

The Coranach has long ago fallen into disuse. It was superseded until the latter half of the Eighteenth century, when this also began to wane, by the bagpipe funeral lament of the Highlanders. In Scotch literature, however, and in references to Scotland in English literature we find many references to the older custom of the Coranach, which gave us the word "hullabaloo."

Town Behind the Times

Within 14 miles of London, the town of Downe is unique in that it has no electricity, no gas, no sewage system, no motion pictures and no doctor. It has a seven-hundred-year-old church, however, of which it is extremely proud. The houses are lighted with oil lamps and the church with candles. Only two houses have been built since 1914.

TOTS' GAY JERSEY FROCKS; FUR TRIM FOR SPORTS COATS

ONCE it was the manner of little girls to sit quietly by, as they gazed with awe and admiration upon the apparel of their elders. No doubt they were thinking, if not saying, "wait until I grow up and I'll have my dresses made with plaits and scallops and pockets and fancy belts 'n' everything just like mother's and big sister's."

Times have changed! Today it is the spirit of 1927 which declares "no more" watchful waiting" for the children in regard to the styling of their frocks. The modern fashionist is taking a keen delight in endowing the clothes of the younger generation with every intriguing detail which is dear to the feminine heart.

Practical Dress for Early Spring.

So it is that the complexes which characterize a sophisticated styling are finding their way into children's costuming this season. Has mother a two-piece jumper suit? So has little daughter. Does big sister wear a coat of novelty worsted with cuffs and collar of spotted calf skin? So does little Miss Seven to Fourteen.

Just now every feminine member of the household is interested in a pretty practical dress for early spring, and for this the mode continues to sing the praises of fine and colorful wool jersey.

The tendency is, this season, toward making up the ever beloved jersey cloth quite fancifully. The rule applies to children's clothes as well as for older folks. This trend is exemplified in the two-piece model here pictured, which is of rose-beige jersey, in that scallops vary the hemline of the blouse, while soft plaits give fullness to the skirt. Spring suits and frocks are showing a partiality for pockets. That is why this little blouse has two of them, and a narrow belt, of course, for the majority of dresses and coats are now belted.

Wool crepe and crepe de chine are also high-lighted among fabrics desirable for little girls' practical early spring dresses. Color combinations are outstanding in these junior frocks.

Haensel and Gretel, so runs the oft told story, journeying far, seeking the bluebird of happiness, return to find it at their very hearthstone, where it ever had dwelt.

Something like Maeterlink's quest of the blue-bird, runs the experience of the fashionist, who traveling in distant lands, scouring the outposts of the world for "something different" with which to satisfy the craving of milady of fashion, discovers in calfskin, yes in the simple home-product calfskin, an answer direct to the cry for novelty in styledom. Those who visioned the possibilities of this homely yet handsome flat fur, have put it to the test, and behold! calfskin as the idol of the hour, and also ponyskin, if you please, when it comes to trimming for the spring coat.

If these fur embellishments are unusual, no less so are the novelty cloakings which they trim. Diversity of weaves is an outstanding feature of the mode.

Not only do fur trimmings as well as the cloth of which the newer coats are made declare a vogue for the unusual, but the manner in which the two are interworked is most intriguing. It is the fashion to harmonize fur with the fabric it trims. Beige calfskin with beige cloth is one of the triumphs of this season. Ombre lapin, which is shaded squirrel, is also very smart.

Smart Spring Coat Model.

Brown novelty weave cloth is the chosen medium for the smart spring coat model in the picture, with collar, cuffs and pockets of brown ponyskin. Note the unique cut of pockets and cuffs.

Buried Treasure

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
Drawing by Ray Walters.

WHO said that Romance is dead in these modern days, in this year A. D. 1927?

Pieces of eight! Doubloons! Treasures of the Spanish Main! Pirate gold! BURIED TREASURE!

Do those words bring back memories to you—memories of your boyhood days when you first read Stevenson's "Treasure Island"? That was long ago, perhaps, and yet—

Here are three dispatches which have appeared in our newspapers within the last few weeks. Read them and see if they don't give you a sort o' thrill:

NEW YORK.—Residents of Asbury Park and nearby villages are warming up to a hunt for pirate treasure as the result of the discovery by Percival G. Ullman, Jr., of No. 96 Lake street, Asbury Park, in that city of a fossilized boot of the type worn by swashbucklers two centuries ago. Embedded in the rock-encrusted boot Ullman found a woman's gold ring, set with a large pearl.

The boot was found near the spot where a flintlock carbine was picked up a month ago. A band of sea marauders, led by a woman, took refuge at the spot. The woman cut her hair short and was a ruthless plunderer, the original "bobbed-hair bandit."

NEW ORLEANS.—Mysterious bands of treasure hunters still range across the Louisiana marshes. They are seeking the buried spoils of the pirate Jean Lafitte.

The buccaneer is said to have cached vast stores of doubloons and pieces of eight along the great coastal stretch southwest of New Orleans.

One party of treasure seekers went so far as to pull up a post set by government surveyors, evidently believing that the stake was one of the markings made by Lafitte.

It is said that two members of Lafitte's band once lived in the vicinity of the city of Lake Charles.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Doubloons, pieces of eight, and other treasures of the Spanish Main, to the value of $50,000,000, lie buried on a South American island, ready for the person who is willing to dig, according to George Finlay Simmons, curator of ornithology of the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, who has just returned from the island. The cache includes much golden plunder taken from the Inca Indians by the Spaniards, who in turn were robbed by the two pirates who buried the loot a century ago on the island off the coast of Brazil.

One of the hoards, Simmons says, amounts to $40,000,000, and was buried by the Spanish pirate, Jose Santos, who captured a ship laden with gold and silver ingots, altar vestments and candelabra from the churches of Lima, Peru.

More than $8,000,000 more was buried on the same island by an English pirate, who styled himself "Zulmiro." Records of this cache were kept and were in the possession of the Russian quartermaster of the pirate ship until he died in the Far East.

Eight expeditions were made to find the treasure between 1800 and 1892, but most of them never reached the desolate coast of the island. Those that did found that the landmarks, marked on the map, had been wiped out by a landslide.

"Robert Louis Stevenson used the place as the scene of 'Treasure Island,'" Simmons says, "but the plunder found in fiction really is still there."

Such items are not at all uncommon in our newspapers and probably will continue to appear therein for many years to come. For, among our most cherished traditions is the belief that every pirate who sailed the main at some time in his career buried a part of his loot somewhere and never recovered it. And there (wherever "there" is) it lies to this day awaiting the lucky discoverer, whom through blind chance or because he has come across some old document which puts him on the trail, it will enrich beyond his wildest dreams. As a matter of fact it is much more likely that the average pirate squandered more of his ill-gotten gains than he ever buried, that not one in ten of all the stories of buried treasure have the slightest foundation in fact and that more money has been spent in the efforts to find this hidden wealth than all the treasure which all the pirates in history ever buried is worth.

But these facts, even if they could be definitely established, probably would fail to dim the lure of the supposed buried treasure nor dampen the enthusiasm of those who go out to seek it. That lure and that enthusiasm are based upon a universal human weakness—the "get-rich-quick" desire. Perhaps Edgar Allen Poe is as much responsible as any one for nourishing the buried treasure angle of that desire. So long as the tradition of hidden treasure on our coasts persists and so long as his "Gold Bug" is read by successive generations of Americans, so long will we have the great American sport of hunting pirate gold.

Only a year or so ago a Canadian announced his invention of the metalophone, an electrical "Gold Bug," which could detect the presence of buried metals even though they were concealed beneath more than 50 feet of solid rock. Immediately the word went out that the metalophone was to be used to find the buried treasure on the historic Cocos island, which lies in the Pacific ocean about 500 miles southwest of Costa Rica and which was a favorite lair of pirates in the old freebooting days. In fact Cocos island has been a magnet for treasure seekers for many years because there is an apparently well-authenticated story that the mutinuous crew of the British ship Mary Dear hid on the island treasure valued at $12,000,000 (some accounts put it at $35,000,000 and others at $60,000,000) more than a hundred years ago. Soon afterwards the secret leaked out and scarcely a year has passed since that time that someone has not tried to uncover this vast wealth. As late as 1925 a party of British scientists set out for that purpose, but if they or anyone else have been successful, the world is yet to hear of it.

The treasure which the famous Captain Kidd is supposed to have buried somewhere along the New England coast is nearly as famous and as much sought after as the Cocos island wealth. It is true that he did bury a part of his loot on Gardiner's island, off Montauk point on Long Island, N. Y., when he returned from his trip a-pirating, but that was recovered soon after his arrest. And that is all of Captain Kidd's gold that has ever been recovered.

The famous Blackbeard is said to have buried part of his piratical wealth in New Jersey. Wherefore "gold diggers" have made the dirt fly at various places in New Jersey but more particularly at Burlington. Legend says that Sir Henry Morgan hid part of his loot beneath the soil of Oak island, off the coast of Maine, and more than $200,000 has been spent from time to time digging on Oak island to recover it. So far the net result has been nothing.

The gold of Jean Lafitte has kept treasure seekers busy at various places along the coast of Louisiana and Texas. This legend is almost a perfect buried treasure yarn. There is a document, bequeathed by a father, about to die, to his son, bearing the date of 1813, which tells of the burial by Lafitte and his men of 70,000 doubloons and a bar of silver. It is signed by a number of the pirate's followers and has as its seal the usual pirate marks, the skull and crossbones and a dagger. There occur also the words "mutiny," "cruelty" and "inquisition" and on the other side is a rude map which is the key to the location of the hoard. There is a story of a party of men who stumbled upon the place where they were sure that the treasure was buried, then went back to get spades to dig and could not find the place again. So there (wherever "there" is) lies Lafitte's buried treasure worth $1,120,000 for someone.

THE TWO PENCILS

"I," said the little pencil, "have had a busy life. I have written so much that I feel as though I really were quite important."

In a Note Book.

"I," said the bigger pencil, "have had bad luck, and somehow I have the feeling that I will never write so very much. You see I have broken off twice and had to be sharpened again.

"My owner makes such a terribly sharp point that I can't help breaking.

"And then she bears down heavily with me, and that—together with a sharp point—just won't do.

"So it does look as though I would not get far with writing. I'm much bigger than you, little pencil, but even when I get small I fear I will not have much to my credit.

"You have really written a great deal, haven't you?"

"Oh, yes," said the little pencil. "I have had no bad luck, and I have led a very busy life.

"I have written many compositions. I have done any number of sums in arithmetic.

"I could tell you I know a great deal about arithmetic and I do sums well.

"My owner says I do them well. She says she always seems to think better when she has me.

"Now of course I really think she is flattering me, but still she does feel that way about it.

"I really don't know much about arithmetic though I can do sums nicely.

"But once I've answered the sums and they are down on the paper I couldn't tell you what they were at all.

"It is the same way about compositions. I've written many, but once they are written, they are written.

"I don't bother further in thinking about them.

"I do geography in the same way, and I haven't any different method for history.

"The dates when kings and queens and presidents and all famous people lived—I've written them down in a note book and my owner has handed in the note book and those dates were all correct.

"But really you must not give me too much credit for knowing a great deal.

"I could have some owners and not know a single thing, nor be able to write a correct answer.

"I really don't take all the credit to myself."

The Fairy Queen had been listening and she was much amused at the talk between the two pencils.

"Well," said the little pencil, "I won't me working much more after a bit, but still I have some more to do, for my owner says she is going to carry me in her coat pocket after this so that when she wants to write anything down she will always have a pencil ready.

She Was Much Amused.

"I'm just that size now.

"So I'll still be useful.

"I'll do whatever she wishes, and it is nice to think that I really did a good pencil's work and wrote the correct answers to sums and questions in history and geography and that my compositions were always well marked."

"You've certainly had a good education," said the bigger pencil, "and I fear I never will have it."

And the Fairy Queen went back to Fairyland and told the Fairies and the Brownies and the Gnomes and the Elves about the conversation between the two pencils.

Not That Far

"Well, Johnnie," said the minister, as he beamed on the son of a parishioner, "you are now going to school, so I suppose you can spell cat."

"C-a-t," replied Johnnie.

"Very good, now spell dog."

"D-o-g."

"Wonderful! Now spell hen."

"Aw, I ain't got that far yet."—Thrift Magazine.

T. R.'s Diplomacy

"I remember once, while serving as a correspondent in Washington," said Sam Langdon of St. Louis, "how I chanced to be present at a diplomatic conference in which intrigue and guile were so manifest as to be almost an affront. Finally Mr. Roosevelt, having stood it as long as he could, jumped to his feet and exclaimed:

"Gentlemen, you can't get away with it! Let me say in plain United States, that a flush in the hand is worth two on the face, and for that reason, the United States of America is standing pat."

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

A farmer seldom looks at the thermometer. What's the use? The work has to be done.

the undertaker, Did you find any scars on the body? "Yes, I found that the ribs on the left side had been crushed and one of them is missing."

Yes, said the Colonel that was the time he lost it, the surgeons said that was the only chance of saving his life, and that a small one.

I with two others, whom he had saved that day, stayed near the hospital visiting him as we were permitted, and cheered and comforted him all we could, until he was pronounced out of danger, and we paid all expenses. Not only those whom he had saved, but many others who heard of his great exhibition of heroism, subscribed to a fund for him, which grew to large proportions, and Duncan used it to pay his way through college.

The whole case was published in the newspapers of that day, copies of which I hold in my hand, but I fear there will not be time to read them now. For this great, unheard of act, he was awarded the highest medal of honor our government could bestow. It is here, and Col. Morgan held up the beautiful token.

After Duncan had recovered sufficiently he entered college, where I often visited him to see how he was getting along, and one day he said to me, "I would like to enter your school when I get through here." I was attending a military academy at that time, and I told him I thought he would like it.

But he said, "I am blemished, they will not admit me." I answered, "when you are ready, come to me and I will do all I can."

Time passed, and in due course he graduated from his college with high honors, as I felt sure he would, and he still wanted to be a soldier, and came to see me, and I told him to stay around as my guest, for awhile, to which he agreed. He did not know why, but I wanted to show him off before the officers and men, for there were but few to be seen like him. He was very attractive, and all he met liked him.

His Highland blood was awake, and when he heard the bugle calls he was feverish, and I noticed that he held his head a bit higher, with his shoulders held back a little stiffer, while his step was longer and firmer than was necessary. I pointed these things out to a number of officers and men, and remarked sometimes, "Wouldn't he make a fine soldier." I was thinking about his lost rib.

I introduced him to a number of officers who had influence and told them of Duncan's past, except the loss of his rib.

In due time he made application to enter the school, and I used all the influence I had, and asked as a special favor that in his medical examination, they would not strip his body. I knew I was asking something unusual, but with the help of some others, I got the examiner to forget it, and Duncan was admitted.

This pleased us both, for I loved to have him near me. We were called "David and Jonathan," for our love for each other was great, "Passing the love of women."

Duncan had been in the school two years and was beloved by everyone, so that when the officers showed some preference for him, it provoked no jealousy anywhere. Then he said to the undertaker:

"Did you find any other scars on the body?"

"Not on the body exactly, but one of his legs had been broken, the foot crushed, and a piece of it is gone."

I believe San Diego can do with LESS TAXES by a vigorous drive to put MORE EFFICIENCY in the business affairs of this city.

I have not made, and will not make, any promises to any person or group, beyond my public pledge to do my level best, if elected, to make San Diego a cleaner, bigger and better city.

I have no alliances, direct or indirect, with any other candidate for any city office. If I am elected Mayor I will earnestly cooperate with the City Council to promote good government and a business administration of our city affairs.
